1. Article One – Name and Purpose

- 1.1. The official name of the recognized student group is “Google Developer Student Club - University of Toronto St. George”
- 1.2. The official acronym or abbreviation of the group is “GDSC UTSG”
- 1.3. The purpose, objectives, mission and/or mandate of the organization:

The Google Developer Student Club (GDSC) powered and backed by Google Developers aims to inspire students in the field of technology. Our club is open to any student in any discipline wishing to advance their skills in developer technology and no prior developer experience is required to be a part. We provide workshops, events and hands-on projects that support and empower all university students who are passionate in growing as a developer to solve real-time problems and increase their knowledge on developer products. We will work towards creating networks amongst university students, faculty, and professionals, both within the University and across Canada which will act as support groups and valuable resources of skill and knowledge for our members. We are a non-profit community of students which promotes developer technology and products to all university students interested in growing their developer skills. Our group of GDSC is linked to the other GDSC groups through common names and goals. GDSC UTSG may also choose to participate in, and/or contribute to joint efforts with other GDSC groups, if they are appropriate to our own goals.

The main goals of GDSC UTSG are:

- To provide workshops and meetups that allow students to explore and learn developer technology
- To inform students about opportunities and products in technology
- To create an academic and social network for students interested in technology
- To help students feel more comfortable and confident in their developer skills and to prepare them for the challenges that lie ahead in the workforce
